Security Services Body Camera Project

By John Bermel, Security

Security Services is rolling out its body camera project starting next week. The Security Services Department, with the Security Services Advisory Group, spent the last year and a half reviewing the system and developing a procedure. The body camera program helps Security Services add an additional level of transparency, promote accountability, add a tool that may de-escalate situations, and add a training tool. Generally, there is a growing expectation in society that public safety providers use this tool.

Beginning November 15, you will see security officers wearing the cameras on the outside of their uniforms. A red light is visible on the front of the camera when it is recording, and you can always ask the security officer whether they are recording. The body camera procedures can be found on the Security Services website. If your office or department would like more information on the body camera program, contact Security Services.

Previous Post
COVID Information Session
Friday, November 12 on Zoom

Next Post
Sarah Fortner

Comments and questions about the Carleton Weekly may be addressed to carleton-weekly.group@carleton.edu.
Pre-Sept. 2009 archives: Currently@Carleton | East Laird Times
This page was last updated on 4 November 2021